This reference list is provided for the learning and convenience of students in my course on “Psychology in American Society and Culture.” It provides call numbers and library locations for sources that can be found in the University of Richmond libraries and indicates ‘NA’ when a source is not available at the University. Students may use Interlibrary Loan to acquire missing sources. In some cases involving journals that are unavailable, I have indicated that I have a personal copy, which could be duplicated by someone who wants it.

A. General Guides

The following resources provide useful background information regarding scientific advances and social contexts, persons and institutions, concepts and methods, theories and practices, schools and traditions, trends and references that are relevant to the history of psychology, especially in the United States over the past two centuries, which is the focus of the course for which this list has been gathered.

C. Readers

There are many anthologies that contain primary and secondary sources on the history of psychology. The following two readers are recent and useful. In the section below on “Specific References,” notice is given when cited articles and chapters are included in either or both of these two books.

D. Specific References

As extensive as it may seem, the following list is far from exhaustive, even regarding the portion of the history of psychology (and its larger social and cultural context) upon which this course is focused, namely, the history of psychology in the United States during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. In a few cases, I have lumped a collection of articles together for convenience, using a citation of “…. et al.” to indicate multiple authors of multiple articles within a single issue of a journal.
